Died.

In East Orange, on the 29th ult., Miss Delana F., daughter of Christopher Richardson, Esq., aged 21 years.

Never has the writer witnessed an occasion of more deep and solemn interest. The young lady was engaged in teaching in the village, and was dearly beloved by her pupils, both in the common and Sabbath school. Only one short week previous to the day of her funeral, she was "teaching young ideas how to shoot." Being suddenly seized with a sort of cholera, she was impressed with the opinion that she could not recover. When her kind parents arrived at the place of her illness, she made her views known, and, at a proper time said, that instead of hearing the writer at West Topsham, I should be called on to preach her funeral sermon! Most solemn thought! We would not occupy room in eulogizing the dead. But justice demands a few remarks. Miss R. was a person of amiable disposition, filial affection, irreproachable character, and religious habits of thought and action.—She was a firm and modest believer in the salvation of all men, and expressed her increasing confidence in that truth, in the hour of death; calmly wiping the tear-drops from a mother's gushing eyes, exhorting her and the rest of the family, not to weep for one who was going to a better country,—a glorious home. Never did an angel-spirit takes its flight to the mansions of the blest, under circumstances of brighter hope. But, the dear-loved Delana is gone, and mourn we must for her loss. Her funeral was attended by a vast congregation of people of all denominations; and to add to the solemn interest of the occasion, a most beautiful group of children, belonging to her Sabbath and common schools, had convened in pews by themselves. They manifested their sweet regard for their instructress, in seriousness and copious tears. Never did we see so many little children in company, behave better. The Lord of mercy bless them, and preserve their precious lives. As an evidence of the culture and taste of the mind of our departed child and sister and friend, we will hereafter offer some few specimens of her composition, for publication in the Watchman.—And may our heavenly Father sanctify this deep affliction to the dear bereaved parents, the sister abroad, the brothers and sisters at home, and all the numerous relations and friends of her whose early death we deplore; especially the precious youth, in the vicinity of her residence and useful life. R. S.

In Shoreham, March 24, Mr. Wm. H. Darby aged 32 years. Circumstances, which need not be mentioned, have prevented our giving a brief obituary of the subject of this notice till now. He died of an abscess which terminated in a consumption. He was confined for a long time, and endured a great deal of suffering from the slow yet insiduous progress of the disease, until he was reduced to nearly a skeleton before the spirit left the earthly tabernacle for "a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." He received all that kind attention and assistance which his relations, friends and neighbors could impart. He was an industrious and useful citizen and a kind husband and father. He manifested a resignation to the divine will, yet the disease was so flattering that probably he cherished hopes of recovery to the last. May God sanctify this bereavement to the lonely widow and little pledges of a father's love. The writer attempted (seeking divine assistance) to administer consolation to the mourning friends on the solemn occasion. K. H.

In Shoreham, June 23, Mr. Leonard Marsh, aged 72 years. He endured the suffering consequent on a lingering consumption with great patience and resignation, not for a moment ever evincing any distrust in the pursuit or future goodness of his Creator. In a strong faith in that goodness to himself and the world of mankind he lived and died. And he honored that faith in a long, virtuous, temperate, and useful life. All who knew him "esteemed him highly for his works sake." And many knew him as a peaceful citizen, a good neighbor and a lover of his fellow beings, one who was ready to assist them in seasons of sickness, suffering, and mortality. He has in turn received such assistance from those who survive him, and know how to appreciate his favors. May they all emulate his virtuous, and enjoy, like him, in "the day of death" that "good name" that is "better than precious ointment," and their sun go down as beautifully and as broad at its setting. And may God bless this dispensation to his afflicted consort, children, and numerous relations who mourn the loss of a dear, honored, and valued friend. The consolations of the Gospel of divine grace were administered to them on the solemn and afflictive occasion by the writer. K. H.
